Race and Racism in America

Register for Sociology 2215 for the upcoming semester

How has race mattered in America? What roles does it play in American society today?

In this class we examine the sociology of race, from back when we invented race as a way to categorize people up to the present day. We explore how race and ethnicity shape people's lives, including in education, health care, criminal justice, housing, mass media and more. We focus on racial inequality, where it comes from, what sustains it, and how we can address it.

This class can help prepare a student to become a more informed and engaged member of our multiracial democracy.
